NOTES AND COMMENTS.

General GATACRE as will be seen by our wires of to-day has received a serious check, and there is every reason to suppose that at least twenty-five per cent. of the force which he used in his advance are either killed or prisoners of war. With the scant knowledge of the incidents, which owing to the sparseness of detail received from Reuters, is conveyed by the communications we have received, it may perhaps be unwise to too readily condemn the tactics which have once again involved our arms in disaster. But it certainly seems to us that for our officers to lead a handful of men, into a district swarming with the enemy, whose very numbers are unknown, cannot on the face of it, be open to commendation. Then again from the communications received it would appear that the very nature of the ground was unknown, and our men advanced to the attack guided by those whose information apparently was false. Of course it is well known that the whole of Cape Colony is teeming with treacherous spies and colonists, who, though British subjects in name, are quite ready to give every assistance to the Boer Commandos, and whilst information can be readily received by them of our movements, it is not by any means so easy for us to receive reliable information of theirs. Under these circumstances and the fact that the Boers can so rapidly mobilise when acting as mounted infantry, it was the height of rashness for a small body like that which General GATACRE took with him to move a long distance from their base to attack an entrenched enemy whose numbers were unknown, and whose rashness is only heightened by their not being in possession of any absolutely reliable information as to the formation of the ground, and the position of the enemy with regard to that ground. From the number of casualties reported it is evident that the contour of the country prevented the forces coming into close contact and evidently the fight was, as far as the main body was concerned, confined to an artillery duel. Had the incident ended simply in an abortive duel and a retirement, there would have been nothing serious in the matter, but unfortunately, we find there are 596 reported missing. There are two ways in which this may have happened. Either they may have been detached to outflank the enemy and got cut off, or they may have formed the rear guard of the retreating force and have been obliged to sacrifice themselves, to cover the retreat. This seems the only reasonable way of accounting for such a number being missing. Of course they may come in yet, let us hope such will be the case. But whatever is the outcome, one lesson should be learnt and that is the utter folly of moving about in Boer infested country with a paltry 2,000 men, especially when those men are infantry, and when there is no accurate information to hand of the numbers of the enemy that may be brought against us. This last is just a repetition of the Ladysmith adventure when a similar number of troops were detached with even more disastrous results.

WEATHER REPORT.

The Observatory report says:—
On the 12th at 11.55 a.m. barometric changes are slight. The depression has probably reached Japan. Pressure is highest over China. The monsoon is likely to freshen on the coast, and in the N. part of the China Sea. FORECAST:—N. winds, probably freshening, changeable.

REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.

THE WAR.

Cape Colony.

An Unsuccessful Attack.

LONDON, December 10th.

Reuter's Correspondent at Moltene states that on the 10th inst. General GATACRE with a force of 2,000 made a forced march and attacked the Boer position at Stormberg in the early morning, but after a three hour artillery duel the position was found to be unassailable and the force retired.

Bechuanaland.

The Modder River bridge has been completed and trains are passing over. A strong force of Boers at Jacobsdal threaten General Methuen's flank.

The Boer Commando which cut the railway near Graspan has been driven off and communication is again restored.

Boer Entrenchments at Spytfontein.

The Boers are busy entrenching themselves at Spytfontein in several tiers of earthworks beginning at the foot of the heights.

General Methuen's Wound.

General Methuen is unable to ride and has to drive.

Natal.

A Boer Advance.

A strong Boer column has crossed the Tugela river at Colepo to attack the Estcourt column.

A Successful Sortie.

The British made an entirely successful sortie from Ladysmith on Friday night. The troops assailed and carried Lombard kop and after dynamiting the six inch guns, and a howitzer and capturing a Maxim retired with the loss of one killed and Major Henderson of the Argyle's wounded. At the same time a squadron of Cavalry cut the Boer telegraph wires and burned the Kraals to the West of Ladysmith.

British Reverse.

General GATACRE reports that he sustained a severe reverse at the attack on Stormberg. It appears that he was misled by the guides and found the ground impracticable. The casualties were 9 officers wounded, and 9 missing, 2 men killed, 17 wounded and 596 missing.

WAR NEWS BY MAIL.

Cronje's Little Joke.

CAPE TOWN, November 1st.

An account in the Cape Times of to-day shows that Commandant Cronje's demand for the surrender of Mafeking "to save further unnecessary bloodshed" was presented on October 16th. After the bombardment which killed one dog, Commandant Cronje's messenger found Colonel Baden-Powell fast asleep. When he awoke he invited the messenger to lunch, and then sent an answer that he would let Commandant Cronje know when he had had enough.

Lord Wolseley on the War.

Lord Wolseley, speaking on Monday at a banquet in London, said:—I think that all people who know anything about the Army should rejoice extremely that our first experiment in mobilization has been as successful as it has been. (Cheers.) Your chairman has mentioned the name of one, a most intimate friend of mine—the present Military Secretary. I think the nation is very much indebted to him, not only for the manner in which this mobilization has been carried out, but still more for having laid that foundation on which our mobilization system is based and for making those preparations which led to its complete success. (Cheers.) There are many other names I might mention; others who have also devoted themselves for many years past in a very quiet manner and with all the ability which now, I am glad to say, so largely permeates the Army—to making these preparations and to try and bring this curious Army of ours up to the level of the modern Armies of the world. (Cheers.)

THE OPPOSITION TO ARMY REFORM.

Although I say it myself, I think I may claim for myself and for those who have worked with me a certain meed of praise for we have worked under extreme difficulties—not only under ordinary difficulties in dealing with a very complicated arrangement, but we have had to work in the face of the dire opposition on the part of a great number of people who could have been the first to have helped us. (Hear, hear.) The Army has referred to the opposition of the Press, but there has been nothing to the opposition we have met with in our own profession—the opposition of 10, 15, or 20 years ago—when the great reforms were begun in the Army by the ablest War Secretary who has ever been in office, I mean Lord Cardwell. His name is now almost forgotten by the present generation, and also the names of many other distinguished officers in their day, whose names were associated with many of the brightest moments of English history and English conquest, and who set their faces bravely against all opposition, and firmly believed that the young men of those days were a set of madmen and a set of Radicals who were anxious to overturn not only British Army but the whole British Constitution with it. (Laughter.) This prejudice spread into high places, until at last we were looked upon as a lot of faddists who ought to be banished to the furthest part of our dominions. (Renewed laughter.) I am glad to say that the tree which we planted then took root, and there gradually grew up around it a body of young officers, who were highly instructed in their profession, who supported us courageously through, and enabled us to arrive at the perfection at which I think we have now arrived. (Hear, hear.)

MILITARY EDUCATION.

There has been abroad in the Army for a great many years past a most earnest desire on the part of a large section certainly to make themselves worthy of the Army and worthy of the nation by whom they were paid and for whose good they existed. That feeling has become more intensified every year, and at the present moment, if you examine the Army List, you will find that almost all the Staff officers recently gone out to South Africa have been educated at the Staff College, established to teach the higher science of our profession and education of young men, who will be able to conduct the military affairs of the country when it comes to their turn to do so. Those men are now arriving at the top of the tree, thank God; while many of those magnificent old soldiers under whom I was brought up have disappeared from the face of the earth; and others who are to be seen in the clubs have come round—they have been converted in their last moments (laughter)—they have the frankness to tell you that they have made a mistake. They recognize that they were wrong and that we were right. (Cheers.)

THE BOER CHARACTER.

I quite endorse what the chairman says about the success of the mobilization, and I will slightly glance at the state of affairs as they at present exist in South Africa. I have the advantage of having spent some time in South Africa and of having been not only General Commanding, but Governor and High Commissioner, with high-sounding titles given me by her Majesty. I know, consequently, not only a little of South Africa, but a good deal of the Boer character. During my stay as Governor of the Transvaal I had many opportunities of knowing people whom you have recently seen mentioned as the principal leaders in this war against us. There are many traits in their character for which I have the greatest possible admiration. They are a very strongly conservative people—I do not mean in a political sense at all; but they were, I found, anxious to preserve and conserve all that was best in the institutions and ideas handed down to them from their forefathers. But of all the ignorant people in the world that I have ever been brought in contact with I will back the Boers of South Africa as the most ignorant. At the same time, they are an honest people. When the last President of the Transvaal handed over the government to me and I may say without parentheticals that the last thing an Englishman would do under the circumstances would be to look in the till (laughter)—there were only four shillings and sixpence to the credit of the Republic. (Laughter.) Within a few weeks or days of the hoisting of the British flag in the Transvaal a bill for £4,115, 4d. came in against the Boer Government and was dishonoured. (Renewed laughter.)

THE QUESTION AT ISSUE.

The Boers at that time—perhaps we did not manage them properly—certainly set their faces against us, and things have gone on from bad to worse until the aspiration now moving them is that they should rule not only the Transvaal, but that they should rule the whole of South Africa, that is a point which, I think, the English people must keep before them. There is no question about ruling the Transvaal or the Orange Free State; the one great question that has to be fought out between the Dutch in South Africa and the English race is which is to be the predominant Power—whether it is to be the Boer Republic or the English Monarchy. (Cheers.) Well, if I at all understand and know the people of this nation I can see but one end to it, and it will be the end that we hope for and have looked for. (Cheers.)

But I would warn every man who takes an interest in this subject not to imagine that war can ever be carried on like a game of chess or some other game in which the most powerful intellect wins from the very first. War is a game of ups and downs; and you may rest assured that it is impossible to read in history of any campaign that has ever been a march of triumph from beginning to end. (Hear, hear.) Therefore, if at the present moment we are suffering from disappointments, believe me, those disappointments in many ways are useful to us. We have found that the enemy who declared war against us—for they are the aggressors—are much more powerful and numerous than we anticipated. But, at the same time, believe me that anything that may have taken place lately to dishearten the English people has had a good effect. It has brought us as a nation closer together, the English-speaking people of the world have put their foot down, and intend to carry this thing through no matter what may be the consequence. (Cheers.)

THE BRITISH OFFICER AND SOLDIER.

I have the greatest possible confidence in British soldiers. I have lived in their midst many years of my life, and I am quite certain of this—that wherever their officers lead, they will follow. (Cheers.) If you look over the lists of our casualties lately you will find that the British officer has led them well. Certainly he has not spared himself; he has not been in the background. (Cheers.) He has suffered, unfortunately, and expects to suffer and ought to suffer; and I hope most sincerely and truly, whatever may be in store for us, whatever battles there may be in this war, that when we read the list of casualties there will be a very large proportion of officers' sufferers as well as men. It would be most unworthy of our Army, and of our nation if our officers did not lead, and if they lead they must suffer as well as those who follow. I am extremely obliged to you for the compliment that has been paid to me. It has been a very great pleasure for me to come here. I thank you sincerely for having listened to me, and hope you will make every allowance for any defect in a speech which certainly had not been prepared. (Loud cheers.)

Mrs. Lionel Phillips's South African recollections.

"Well, anyhow, it is not every man who has had the experience of being sentenced to death," was the sentiment with which Mrs. Lionel Phillips, one of the five principal reformers of Johannesburg, endeavoured to console his wife when she visited him for the first time in Pretoria Gaol. That his children should know why their father was sentenced to death is the reason for which, as Mrs. Lionel Phillips tells us in a short preface, her South African Recollections have been written. She wished to place on record, while the facts were still fresh in her memory, a connected summary of the chapter of South African history in which Mr. Phillips took so prominent a part and of which she, as an intelligent woman enjoying the confidence of her husband, was in a position to have full knowledge at first hand. She has carried out her intention in a simple, unpretentious, and straight-forward manner which will cause her book to be read with interest by a far wider circle than that for which it was first intended. Incidentally, in justifying Mr. Phillips to his children, Mrs. Phillips justifies Johannesburg to the world, and there are many people besides Mr. Phillips's children who will be glad to read a narrative, shorn of all technical detail, of the events which have led to the present crisis.

Mrs. Phillips is herself a South African by birth. She has known the colonial Boer from her childhood upward; her school friends were many of them daughters of the leading Dutch families of South Africa. She brings, therefore, to the writing of her story one of the first requisites—a full and familiar acquaintance with the conditions of life and character of which the Transvaal drama has been evolved. Her early married life was spent at Kimberley, whence, after the amalgamation of the diamond mines, she went in 1889 with her English husband to Johannesburg. The year in which gold was discovered in Johannesburg was 1886. In 1889 the value of the Rand, though recognized, was far from being so fully established as it now is. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips were therefore among the Uitlanders who have seen and taken part in the struggle between the Uitlander community and the Pretoria Government from the beginning. Mrs. Phillips gave an interesting description of the Transvaal and the life of its Boer inhabitants in those days, before railways were introduced and when all locomotion had to be done by coach or ox wagon. "A not uncommon and exciting experience," she says, "was when the coach arrived at river too swollen to be crossed and the unhappy passengers had to be hoisted across in a box." She herself had often "miled about the Modder River in that inhuman fashion, a rope being stretched across the river and a small packing case hung upon it, which was worked by pulleys, and she found it "a curious feeling to dangle a hundred and fifty feet up in the air with a roaring torrent beneath and the knowledge that if the rope broke you would not be left to tell the tale." In her childhood she had been accustomed to long journeys by ox wagon and found them "not without their charm." "Sometimes for days together we would not outspan near a house and had to sleep either in the wagon or under it. On a bright starry night in that climate it is no punishment to wrap oneself in a kaross and sleep in the open. Even the melancholy cry of the jackal is not unpleasant if not too near."

The Dutch districts of the Cape have for a long time been open to the influence of railroads and the increased intercourse which, easy means of communication bring in their train. Mrs. Phillips, with her knowledge of the colonial Boer, notes a great difference which she truly says, is not recognized in England between him and his compeer of the Transvaal. Though au fond their natures and characters may be much alike, there is at this day a considerable difference in many of their ideas, owing to the different life they have led for several generations; and it must also be remembered that the Transvaal Boer is of a rebel stock—his hand against every man, and every man's hand against him. In 1835, when the great trek from the colony took place, these men's ancestors were the men who defied the Government—with great good cause in many instances—and whose hearts were filled with bitterness and loathing, whose one idea was to get away from their oppressors. The difficulties and dangers that they went through, fighting wild beasts, as well as Kaffirs, although it gave them a rugged independence, at the same time developed some of the very qualities possessed by their foes—namely, treachery and a callous cruelty. Hence one has to distinguish between them and the colonial Boer who, during the same period has gradually been enjoying the advantages of settled government and contact with a superior class of person. The Boer living on his solitary farm has been exempt from laws and has gone his own way for so many years that now force is the only argument that appeals to him.

The approximation of Boer character to that of the Kaffir, resulting from the hard conditions of early life in the Transvaal, is the keynote of Mrs. Phillips's appreciation of the development of contemporary Boer life. Yet she is not unjust. She recognizes many fine qualities in the Boer character.

lies in the Transvaal Boer and believes in the future which may be before him when his country is delivered from the yoke of the corrupt foreign. Hollander. She has no words too strong for the Hollander and German gang by whom President Kruger has allowed himself to be surrounded. Of Kruger himself she says that "once seen he is not easily to be forgotten." He has a certain natural dignity of bearing, and I think his character is clearly to be read on his face—strength of will and cunning, with the dulness of expression one sees on peasants' faces." The habit of mind which inclines him to govern all foreigners as Kaffirs is illustrated by the following incidents which occurred shortly after the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips in Johannesburg. A famine, during which prices for the necessities of life had risen to almost prohibitive sums, had greatly oppressed the population of Johannesburg, with the necessity for establishing railway communication with the Cape. President Kruger had refused to give his consent to the construction of any railway in the Transvaal until the Delagoa Bay line had been completed. Numerous petitions had, however, been presented to him from various parts of the country, and he had consented to come to Johannesburg to hear the representatives of the people on the subject. "Thousands of people had assembled at the Wanderers Hall, and the President was to address them from the platform. Mrs. Phillips had a seat just behind him.

Just as he was beginning to speak some youths in the crowd below began to sing "Rule Britannia." He glared stolidly into space for a moment, then roared out, as if speaking to a naughty child, "Bljst! (Be quiet.)" A burst of laughter was the natural response, as the orderly minded mind is not accustomed to the paternal method of dealing with unruly people. Without a single word he turned his back, walked off, and all the protestations, the serious part of his audience were unavailing. He drove off to the Landrost's house in Government-square, not having been five minutes in face of the thousands who were anxiously awaiting his decision on a vital question.

This was the beginning of those negotiations between the Uitlanders and the Government of Pretoria which, after nearly ten years of incidents varying in intensity up to the finally conclusive "You have not got the guns, I have," results, have at last ended in the despatch to the British Government of such an ultimatum. Great Britain would have hesitated to send to a Kaffir tribe, that night the Transvaal flag was pulled down from the Landrost's house. Two men were caught, and the incident, which figures in Transvaal history as the "flag incident," has been prominently put forward as a reason for the distrust which Pretoria felt itself obliged to entertain towards Johannesburg.

From this beginning Mrs. Phillips relates clearly, simply, and with easy progression the story of which the main facts are no longer new, but of which certain fresh details and side lights are now for the first time brought forward in connexion with the Reform movement led by her husband and his colleagues. She shows how, far from stirring up the movement, the so-called "capitalists" were for a long time strongly averse to it, and relates frankly enough her own little endeavours to induce her husband to join in its earlier stages. One of the local papers having reproached Mr. Phillips for making no stand in the interests of the Uitlander community against the Boer Government, Mrs. Phillips felt through all her anger at the abuse that "there was much truth in some of the suggestions."

I then said to Lionel, and repeated the question several times afterwards, "Why do you not take up a stand on political grounds and show the Transvaal Government that it is no longer possible to endure this intolerable state of things?" And his answer was the same invariably. "Don't talk nonsense. I have to consider my firm and we represent interests of far too many people to dare to risk them."

In her final account of the uprising at Johannesburg Mrs. Phillips does not spare Dr. Jameson for having allowed the imputation of cowardice to rest unjustly upon the Reform Committee. Neither does she hold her hand in the description of the negotiations conducted by Sir Hercules Robinson for the subsequent pacification of the town. She sums them up as "a thing to the world the 'and spectacle of a certain Governor, a man beloved by all who knew him, but physically unfit for his work, undertaking a most difficult diplomatic mission and making a dreadful mess of it." He stayed in Pretoria five days, saw Kruger once, and sent the British Resident to persuade Johannesburg to disarm or to promise that the grievances should be examined and redressed. It was not till he had returned to Cape Town that the Uitlander community were made aware that he had negotiated no terms whatever for their surrender, but had left Johannesburg absolutely at the mercy of the Boers. From that day the most signal acts of tyranny and injustice were committed over and over again by the Boer oligarchy. The home Government, although they paid the whole of the Transvaal taxes. Let it be always remembered that the Dutch did not ask for the Transvaal one single privilege beyond those which Dutch settlers enjoyed in the Cape Colony. One point which he could not help referring to was the possibility that the Cape Dutch might sooner or later intervene in the present conflict. If they did so that might at first be awkward for us, but it would be still more awkward afterwards for the Dutch. He confessed that he regarded with great apprehension what might be the attitude of the natives towards the vanquished when we had conquered the Boers. He had already said, and he must repeat, that in view of such a contingency the Government were not even now sending out sufficient troops to South Africa. It was probable that when our Government calculated what was necessary for this campaign they did not reckon upon an early accidental capture of two of our battalions, or upon possible accessions of Cape Dutch to the Boer side, or upon the possible action of the natives when our enemy was defeated. Whilst there was no serious crisis at present, we must remember that somewhat critical developments might arise. He did not himself believe that the Boers would have ventured to go to war against the united forces and resources of our Empire unless they had received some friendly advice—quite unofficially, of course (laughter and cheers)—that they would fare better if they fought than if they did not fight, and that by fighting they would afford some ground for certain other countries to intervene in the way of arbitration. Having paid a tribute to the memory of that gallant but unfortunate young officer, Commander Egerton. Lord Charles said he had seen it stated that the Boers had sent to this country or elsewhere to get privateers. Where would any such privateers get to? Why, only to the very bottom of the deep blue sea, and then quickly (laughter and cheers). In commending the way in which the transports had been got ready, he said some people who did not understand what had to be done seemed to think the process slow. It no more followed that we should keep hundreds of camels and elephants always ready in London because we should require such animals if we went to war in Egypt or India than that we should have transports ready before they were needed, especially as our mercantile marine offered such vast resources. No fewer than 115 vessels, with a gross tonnage of 500,000 tons, had been employed in the transport of our troops, and all without interfering with the trade of the country. It was a great matter that we could now more than ever count upon the affection and sympathy of the great American nation. If foreign Powers seriously consider the vast resources of this country he thought that perhaps the language of their Press would not be quite so disagreeable. Being now engaged in war, we had to finish the fight; in sporting phrase, this was to be a fight to a knock-out (laughter). He fully believed in the patriotism of our people and the splendidly proved heroism of our soldiers and sailors. We intended to vanquish the Boers and to settle the Transvaal question adopting in its settlement the lines of fairness, sympathy, and justice. (Cheers.)

Upon the motion of Mr. Duxford, M.P., Lord C. Bessford was thanked for his address.

Continental Opinion.

PARIS, October 27th.

The perfidious efforts of Dr. Leyds' diplomacy have long been notorious throughout the whole of Europe. He is certainly one of the most active, audacious, and perhaps dangerous of the Boer emissaries; nor, content with falsifying history, misrepresenting facts, and exciting passion, he employs most artful and insinuating means, and this with such adroitness that it sternly contradicted he can shrink responsibility by insisting that his words and ideas have been misconstrued. I will not say more than this, and I must not be misinterpreted as saying more. I have heard more of these covert allusions, indeed, to other and more persuasive methods as having been used by him to enlist supporters. I will not dwell on such insinuations, nor hypocritically credit them while feigning to repudiate them. When a man has indignantly combated the calumnious legend of the Dreyfus Syndicate, he cannot consistently assume the existence of a Transvaal Syndicate. I do not, therefore, in any way accuse Dr. Leyds, or those inspired by him, of exercising or being subject to influences which he would not be publicly avowed. I do not, however, shrink from saying that he recoils from no means, however unscrupulous, of exciting the opinion of the world against England, and of creating a strong animosity against English policy. As such accusations should not be put forward without demonstration, let me state what has been going on for the last two days.

The newspapers published yesterday Sir A. Milner's despatch stating that he was doing his utmost to prevent the Boers from taking part in the quarrel, but that there was some reason to fear his voice might not be listened to. These journals immediately question Sir A. Milner's sincerity, and insinuated that his efforts to keep the Basutos quiet existed only on paper. This was a stepping-stone for an outburst of calumny, for holding up a pretended fact to world-wide indignation. Up to yesterday Dr. Leyds kept in the background; but to-day he appears on the scene, not at Paris but at Brussels, because his words can be telegraphed and produce a greater effect. The insinuation of yesterday is to-day officially confirmed. Here is the Brussels telegram—

"Dr. Leyds is informed that the English are arming South African natives and are making use of them in their conflict with the Boers. Dr. Leyds states that he has information which precludes any doubt of the correctness of this news."

And this evening the Débat, without accepting as absolute truth the statements of Dr. Leyds, publishes an article with dwells on the dangers to which the whites of South Africa would be exposed, and, no doubt with perfect good faith, treats a mere hypothesis as a fact; serious to civilization throughout the world. The Débat anticipates protestations from the English Government of its desire for the neutrality of the native races, but says—

"It may be that without England having naturally anything to do with it, the Basutos may one day enter on the scene. They have old quarrels to settle with the descendants of the Boer trekkers of 1836. Their intervention might therefore be explained in the most spontaneous way and it would perhaps be calculated to serve British interests. It might be the signal for a great devastation in South Africa. The Kafirs number nearly 4,000,000, while the whites scattered among them are scarcely 800,000. The natives have been subjected to the patient labours of the missionaries, but they are still not to that state of nature which, as there is now no illusion, has nothing angelic. If they take up arms, there is a risk of the war becoming very long, and of a general pillage accumulating ruins in all parts of South Africa."

This is the way in which respectable journals unconsciously aid and abet the methods employed by Dr. Leyds.

The Temps, while prepared for surprises, dwells on the terrible disproportion of the forces of the belligerents, and urges that the temporary equality of forces should be utilized for attempting negotiations for the benefit of the weaker party. It observes that information is being withheld from the English public, and that the abandonment of the wounded at Dundee was only indirectly avowed in the House of Commons.

The Liberté learns from its London Correspondent that, in spite of the War Office silence, the capture of Mafeking may be considered as an accomplished fact.

German Entente Cordiale.

BERLIN, November 5th.

It is noteworthy that, as the day of the Emperor's departure for England approaches, the Anglophobia of the German Press is proportionately modified. This is doubtless due to the obvious impropriety of vilifying a nation to whose Sovereign and people the German Emperor is shortly to pay a friendly visit. In connection with this revulsion of feeling it should be pointed out that the Kölnische Zeitung and the Frankfurter Zeitung have not contributed to the Anglophobic effusions of their contemporaries.

To-day no fewer than three leading journals, among them being the Post, which is traditionally Anti-English, publish articles rebutting the idea that Germany hates, or is even hostile to, England. Their main object, however, is to make capital out of the situation for the Navy Bill by skillful insinuations that Great Britain will have to reorganize her military system, hoping thereby to reconcile the German people to the necessity of a first-class fleet.

The following announcement with regard to the Samoa Agreement was issued by the Foreign Office last night—

"The Governments of Great Britain and Germany have come to an agreement by which Great Britain renounces in favour of Germany all her rights over the Islands of Upolu and Savaii in the Samoan group.

"The Governments of Great Britain and Germany renounce in favour of the United States of America their rights over the Island of Tutuila, and the other islands in the Samoan group east of the 151st degree of east longitude.

"Germany renounces in favour of Great Britain her rights over the Tonga Islands, including the Vavau group and Savage Island.

"Germany transfers to Great Britain the islands in the Solomon group now belonging to her, situated to the east and south-east of Bougainville and Buka.

"The two Governments agree to divide the neutral zone in the Hinterland of the African Gold Coast in such a way that the western portion, including Gambaga and Mamprusi, shall fall to Great Britain, and the eastern portion, including Yendi and Chakosi, to Germany."

Abortive Virulence.

ODESSA, October 31st.

The attempts to collect subscription throughout South Russia for the Transvaal have resulted in an utter fiasco, notwithstanding the continued bitter Press campaign against England.

LONDON, November 9th.

Pietermaritzburg, the capital of Natal, is strongly fortified with heavy guns placed on heights commanding the approaches to the town.

The Daily Chronicle correspondent at Cape Town states that twenty New South Wales Lancers, who arrived a few days ago from London, are returning to Australia—five owing to ill-health and fifteen because their employers refused to extend their leave. The withdrawal is not likely to materially weaken the strength of the corps.

Later particulars have been received of the British victory over the Boers in the neighbourhood of the railway line between Ladysmith and Colenso, on Friday last. It appears that a strong British force from Ladysmith having made a reconnaissance towards Colenso discovered Boer guns at the summit of Grobler's Kloof. The artillery of both forces were soon in action. Meanwhile the British cavalry skirted the hill, while the infantry crept to the summit regardless of the fire of the enemy, which was unceasing and well directed. Several brave British soldiers fell either dead or wounded, before the mountain had been climbed, but the force still pressed on. On reaching the summit a stout resistance was offered by the Boers, but eventually the enemy were driven from their position by a succession of splendid charges, over 100 Boers being killed by British bayonets, while the remainder were driven in headlong rout to the plain below. Here they were intercepted by the British cavalry, and literally slashed to pieces.

A Transvaal artillery officer, disguised as an ambulance driver, entered Ladysmith three times on Thursday last with wounded soldiers hoping to observe the effect of the Boer shells upon the bombardment. The identity of the "ambulance driver" was not discovered until too late to effect his arrest, but it is thought that the information he obtained will not prove of great service to the enemy in the carrying out of their designs.

It appears that after the battle of Elands-laagte the Boer garrison at Johannesburg were sent to the front, and only one gun and a few police were left in the city.

The British authorities have ascertained that the Boers have an enormous supply of shot and shell and cartridges, they having been lying in heavy stocks ever since the Jameson raid. An armoured train with a strong detachment of the Royal Irish Fusiliers has left Estcourt for Colenso with a view to repairing the line which has been destroyed by the Boers. The Boers seem to have withdrawn from Colenso and are concentrating four miles northward in the direction of Ladysmith. A Boer despatch referring to the recent fighting before Ladysmith declared that the British artillery fire created a veritable inferno.

The Auxiliary Corps formed at Johannesburg prior to the outbreak of hostilities comprised principally of foreign Outlanders, have been shot by Boers for their cowardice during the battle of Elands-laagte. This action of the Boers has led to some discontent among the survivors of the legion.

The Boer investment of Ladysmith exhibits so little enterprise and skill that British cavalry are constantly out reconnoitring. General Joubert's inactivity is attributed to heavy losses which the Boers have sustained. It is not expected that hostilities will be resumed until the Boer columns, which were sent southward and which suffered terrible loss are reconcentrated.

A Boer force consisting of 350 men have captured Ingwalima in Zululand. A large commando of the Boers has burned Bromberg, a village in Swaziland. It is thought from the fact that the Swazis have been giving trouble.

A Boer force comprising 3,000 burghers and many German artillerymen with several heavy quick-firing guns have left Pretoria. These troops are proceeding to the Orange Free State frontier in anticipation of a British invasion in that direction.

The Imperial Government has gratefully declined Canada's offer to send a second contingent to South Africa.

The Times publishes the following—

"The battle at Belmont opened at 3.56 a.m. on the 31st. The Guards attacked the first position, climbing the hills under an extremely heavy fire, which was repaid till they were within 350 yards. The Guards did not answer the fire, but used the bayonet only. Their charge is one of the finest achievements in the record of the Brigade. Afterwards the Grenadiers, the Scots Guards, and the Coldstreamers covered the advance, clearing consecutively the second and third positions of the enemy. The 9th Brigade, consisting of the Yorkshires, the Northumberlands, and their supports were especially exposed to a concentrated fire. Our artillery severely damaged the Boer laager in the rear; but the pursuing cavalry was unable to overtake the fugitives or transport. Lieut. Willoughby, of the Coldstreamers, was treacherously shot from an ambush under cover of a white flag. Lieut. Blundell, of the Grenadiers, (since dead) was shot by a wounded Boer while succouring him. Especial gallantry was displayed by Major Milton, leading the Mounted Infantry, who were ambushed close to the scene of action. He supplied a trooper, whose horse was killed, with his own, and walked away under a heavy fire of bullets. The prisoners say that they did not believe, before the fight, that all the armies of Europe could drive them out. The Boers used some Dum-Dum bullets.

SOUTH AFRICA ITEMS.

THE DISAPPOINTMENT ON THE BOERS. THEIR FAILURE TO CRUSH A SMALLER BRITISH FORCE.

A special cable from London to the Englishman states that well authenticated reports are published of the widespread and growing dissatisfaction in the Boers' ranks, which is assuming an aggressive aspect. They were led to expect a comparatively easy task in overwhelming the British forces in South Africa. The determined and successful resistance offered, and the failure of their plans, especially of their rushing tactics in Natal, have disheartened them greatly. Most strenuous efforts were made to bring the fullest available forces to bear at the outset, with the idea of inflicting crushing defeats upon the British before reinforcements arrived. Even children of thirteen years of age were compelled to take up arms. Now dysentery has broken out, and large numbers are said to be incapacitated from this cause.

ATTEMPTS TO INDUCE COLONIAL BURGHES TO REBEL.

Another special telegram to the Englishman states that the Boers are using every inducement to influence Afrikaners in the Cape Colony to rebel, and to throw in their lot with them. Particularly imposing demonstrations have been made at Colenso by the Boer Commandant, and the strongest appeals have been addressed to the Colonial Burghers to come out and join the forces. (God save the King.) The Boers have been crowned with victory. The Boers are preparing to retire from Ladysmith.

A NEW MANOEUVRE.

Colonel Baden Powell is instructing his men in what is a new manoeuvre, that of charging on horse-back with fixed bayonets. The Boers are taught to use their rifles as lances.—S. F. P.

FOOTBALL.

HONGKONG F. C. v. ROYAL WELSH FUSILIERS.

This interesting and well contested game was played on the Club ground on the Happy Valley yesterday afternoon. A good showing of spectators was present, principally soldiers, and the weather was delightful. The game was keenly contested all through, but with perfect good humour. Jenkins took Howards place at half back, otherwise the Club team was the same as on Saturday.

The Club kicked off from Ravillon end at 4.20 p.m. Some pretty play by the Club forwards took the ball down to the R.W.F. goal at once, but after some quick play the R.W.F. was sent back to the field, the left wing getting hold of it. A good run was spilt by the ball going into touch. After the throw out, the Club worked the ball down to the soldiers goal, where, after some slight scrambling it was placed into the net by Danby with a hot shot. This was about 5 minutes after the start. After this the soldiers continually bombarded the Club goal, but failed to get by Kew, he doing some good handling. The play was pretty even for a few minutes, when the R.W.F. left wing again got away, Kew only saving at the expense of a corner, which, however, was unfruitful. Some more good work by R.W.F. forwards were well saved by Kew, who had plenty of work. The soldiers continually got away with the ball but seemed unable to score. Kew saving brilliantly, Pinckney relieved the pressure by a well timed kick to his wing, which Noble took advantage of, getting clean down the field, but not being well backed up, his good run was unprofitable. The forwards again pressed and sent in a hot shot, but Kew again saved in good style, the ball being sent back to the Club goal, who got well away and after some good combined play, Low sent in a hot shot, finding the net, scoring the second goal for the Club. Ross got hurt and had to leave the field for a few minutes. After kicking off the soldiers travelled down with the ball to the Clubs goal and from a scrimmage in front of goal secured a corner, after the kick out the ball was got well clear of the Club goal when the R.W.F. centre half back tripped Danby from behind. A foul was given and free kick followed. Here some dispute arose. Jenkins took the kick, on the Referee blowing his whistle appeared to kick at the ball. The Fusiliers rightly charged and took the ball, but the Club appealed and the ball was brought back. Nothing remarkable happened up to the blowing of the whistle at half time, when the score was—

H. K. F. C. 2 goals to R. W. F. 0.

On resuming play, Ross reappeared. After 2 or 3 minutes play the R.W.F. got a free kick from about half way. The ball was kept in the Club 25 for sometime, the Soldiers very near scoring once. Looker relieved and Low got away with a good run only being brought up by Bellis. Two corner kicks were gained in rapid succession by the Club, but the good sort and head work of the soldiers backs prevented any score. A foul in front of the R.W.F. goal resulted in a scrimmage, in which C. T. Kew hurt his ankle and had to retire for some time. The soldiers kept hovering round the Club goal every now and then getting in a shot but could not get past Kew, until, at length, from a scrimmage they rushed the ball, thus scoring their first goal. C. T. Kew again resumed his place though somewhat lame. From this the Club seemed to go to pieces and failed to stop the rushes of the soldiers. Some splendid kicking by Bellis enabled the R. W. F. to score again thus equalizing, much to the delight of their partisans. From the kick off, again the soldiers took the ball and after some good play by Miller, scored the third goal. Getting the ball again Williams went off down the field, trying a long shot which ended in a corner against the Club. From the corner kick, C. T. Kew got the ball and took it out of danger, passing to Ross. A good run followed but was well stopped by the R. W. F. backs. Williams again went off with the ball passing it to his centre, who went in a hard shot well saved by Kew. Some long kicking followed until Miller took the ball, passing every one until he came to Looker, who effectually put an end to his career. The ball was soon sent back to the Club quarter where after some tricky play in front of goal it was sent through for a fourth time. Only a few minutes were left to play and at call of time no further score being made, the R.W.F. left the field the victors by four goals to two.

The teams lined up as follows—

R.W.F.
Goal.
Evans.
Backs.
Edwards. Bellis.
Half Backs.
Phillips. Pancell. Jones.
Forwards.
Williams. Neil. Miller. Stevens. Dawson.

O.
Forwards.
Ross. Green. Danby. Noble. Low.
Half Backs.
Jenkins. C. T. Kew. Hancock.
Backs.
Looker. Pinckney.
Goal.
F. H. Kew.
Referee Mr. Duncan.

For the victors, Williams and Miller in the forward line played a good game, in fact it is hard to pick out the individual players as they all played well.

For the Club, Looker and Pinckney played well as also did both the Kews. The forwards played well together, but shot very badly.

There is no doubt that the best team won, as the R.W.F. continually got through the defence and peppered the goal unmercifully. If the Club had had a less tried custodian than Kew, they would have left the field with very much the worst of the game. Much credit is due to the R.W.F. for the way they pulled the game out of the fire.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

SUPREME COURT.

IN SUMMARY JURISDICTION.

(Before Mr. Justice Wise, P.M. Judge.)

December 12th.

Rosa Ah Sue late barmaid of the Stag Hotel sued the proprietor, Chow Chee Kwai for $720 for wrongful dismissal and breach of agreement defendant having agreed to employ the claimant as a barmaid for ten months.

The claimant was represented by Mr. Mounsey and the defendant by Mr. Huxtable. The case was an adjournment from 7th inst. when the parties sought a compromise.

The suit arose from an objection raised at the last licensing session, by the police to the renewal of the licence of the Stag Hotel, on account of the employment of the two barmaids, Rosa Ah Sue and Ruby Dwyer, the licence being eventually granted after their dismissal. The defendant since the adjournment had paid into court $157.50, but his Honour held that as there was nothing alleged against the personal character of the claimant she was entitled to the full amount of her claim and judgment was entered accordingly with costs.

Ruby Dwyer who made a similar claim was also given judgment for the full amount with costs.

In a counter claim made by Chow Chee Kwai against the two claimants for $36.50 for the value of certain articles of furniture judgment was agreed to and entered for the claimant.

KIDNAPPING.

The buildings at Chow Tau Point, Canton, are very fine, though there are some poor houses as well. In one of the houses, which appeared rather dilapidated lived an old woman and several maid-servants. Last Saturday, sampan manned by some ferocious looking men, rowed up to the Point, and the men landed, went straight to the old woman's house and carried two of the maid servants back to the sampan and rowed away again. The woman who saw the kidnappers leaving the house with the maids, followed after them shouting for help but without effect, the robbers having a good start managed to escape.

The Inzan Gold Mine.

TROUBLE WITH KOREAN GOVERNMENT.

SEOUL, November 25th.

It was recently reported that the Korean Government had granted a concession to Mr. Morgan to work the Inzan gold mine. The Kojo Shimun (a Korean paper) states, however, that the Korean Government has now refused the grant on the ground that the mine should be worked by Koreans. The British Chong-A-Jaire has made a vigorous protest against the refusal of the Korean Government, and negotiations are in progress.

The Inzan Mine Affair.

SEOUL, November 27th.

A collision has taken place between Great Britain and Germany in regard to the application of Mr. Morgan to obtain a concession for working the Inzan gold mine.

It is alleged that the German Consul has lodged a protest with the Korean Government that the concession should not be granted to the British, but to German subjects.

The Kwang-Chau-wan Affair.

TOKYO, November 27th.

The Peking dispatch of the 26th states that the French demands in regard to the Kwang-chau-wan disturbance are that the official responsible for the murders and the outbreak should be put to death and a small pecuniary compensation paid. It is believed that the Chinese Government will easily accede to the unexpectedly small demand.

EMPRESS OF INDIA... Comdr. O. P. Marshall, R.N.R. ... WEDNESDAY, 14th Feb., 1900.

THE magnificent Twin-screw Steamships of this Line pass through the famous INLAND
SEA OF JAPAN, and usually make the voyage YOKOHAMA TO VANCOUVER (B.C.) in 12 DAYS, saving THREE DAYS to a WEEK in the Trans-Pacific journey, and make connection at Vancouver with the PALATIAL TRANS-CONTINENTAL TRAINS of the CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY which leave daily, and cross the Continent FROM THE PACIFIC TO THE ATLANTIC WITHOUT CHANGE. Close connection is made at Montreal, Quebec, Halifax New York and Boston with all Trans-Atlantic Lines, which passengers to Great Britain and the Continent are given choice of.

Passengers Booked through to all principal points and AROUND THE WORLD.
Return tickets to various points at reduced rates, Good for 4, 6, 9 and 12 months.
SPECIAL RATES (First class only) granted to Missionaries, Members of the Naval, Military, Diplomatic and Civil Services, and to European Officials in the Service of China and Japan Governments.

The attractive features of the Company's route embrace its PALATIAL STEAMSHIPS, (second to none in the World), the LUXURANCE OF ITS TRANS-CONTINENTAL TRAINS (the Company having received the highest award for same at recent Chicago World's Exhibition), and the diversity of MAGNIFICENT MOUNTAIN AND LAKE SCENERY through which the Railway passes.

THE DINING CARS AND MOUNTAIN HOTELS of this route are owned and operated by the Company, and their appointments and Cuisine are unexcelled.
